Dust Detectives Mystery 7:

Want fries with that?

I'm insanely confident about today's antique. My brother's more distracted than usual, so I'm the boss. Detective Reba here.

It's way cooler in the hayloft. Thom's no longer coughing from all the junk in yesterday's humidity. He prefers the cooler spring and fall when other people's allergies go crazy. I love summer and winter. They match my style. I'm big into fun. Thom designs comics or practices being a chef. But he'll go snowshoeing with me if I stop every single time he wants to take pictures.

DEB REED
Wind in the Attic

His phone photos are in colour, but he's been editing many of them into black and white. Our great-grandfather appreciates this since he also has an eye for art. Farmers notice changes, especially how nature paints totally different moods over the very same fields. He once asked Thom for a print of the barn against a thunderstorm sky. That picture is now framed in wood, and hangs in Pops' bedroom.

Pops feels much better today, and is back to his old self. His eyes twinkle when Thom and I show him what we bring from the hayloft. We choose stuff we can safely carry up and down the ladder, plus we return every object to exactly where we found it. Thom says it's the right thing to do. He saves photos of antiques for future drawing reference.

We're now on the porch swing, sipping lemon-mint iced tea again, and helping ourselves to cookies. When Aunt Vera isn't around (she's Pops' other daughter, and our Gran's sister), we get to eat as many as we want. Thom chomps loudly all around his third molasses cookie. I hate those, and eat politely, so I nibble on a tiny store-bought cocoa snap.

Pops instantly recognizes today's antique, but still asks for guesses. He uses lots of -ate words, like investigate, concentrate, speculate, evaluate. Thom's still way too busy inhaling cookies, so it seems I'm flying solo:

OMG! I know EXACTLY what this is. It's obviously for making crinkle-cut fries. You heat up the iron bits on a wood stove, then squeeze them together around a piece of potato!

Thom chuckles, and looks up from his annoying slobbering. Crumbs drop. Then he slurps his tea. Ew!

Pops stares at him and waits many seconds. Thom's still in molasses-land, already reaching for home-bake number five. Who's counting? I am. You'd think we didn't feed him at home. Six. Seven. Slobber. Slurp…

Spot on, Reba! You've solved how to heat these. Mother sometimes even used a kerosene lamp. Those wooden handles protected fingers. The crinkly ends crimped my little sister's hair. She wanted curls like older girls, and this was a shortcut. Actually, this crimper might be quite useful for at least one of you…

Pops tugs at Thom's shaggy hair. Gran recently streaked it neon red and yellow:

Shall we test a hundred-year-old beauty tool? We might improve this Vincent van Gogh party going on here. After Thom's final cookie, that is…

Author's Note

Our second read-aloud newspaper series for today's kids investigates and honours the generations before them. Past lifetimes were as meaningful then as our current realities are to us. Kids everywhere are naturally curious, and they love a good historical mystery. Everyone does!

Artifacts are not always recognizable to newer generations. In this series, twin detectives (you might recognize them from Series 1), apply their former teacher's learning approach to examine their great-grandfather's antique collection. There's a real photo every time, questions, speculation, informed answers, and hopefully, revived knowledge around what was once very important to our elders. Enjoy!

New hunting dog savvy

NOW THAT hunting season is almost upon us, many hunters will be sneaking in new items to make their time in the field more enjoyable. Much has been written by experts such as me on the proper ways to sneak in new guns, fishing rods, camo clothing, boots, decoys, canoes and boats so they go unnoticed by your budget-conscious better half.

STEVE GALEA
Beyond 35

Yet precious little has been written on the fine art of sneaking in a hunting dog.

As you might suspect, this takes a little more commitment.

For instance, until the pup is discovered, you will have to say that you are the one responsible for all the "accidents."

This alone will put a great strain on a relationship. But it is nothing compared to the strain that occurs when your spouse finally finds out you got yet another hunting dog that costs more than the home renovation that you said was "too expensive."

But we are getting ahead of ourselves. The first issue is sneaking the pup in the house.

In the old days, a pup used to be snuck into the house using the old trench coat and fedora method. This requires the person sneaking the pup in to enter the house fully hidden inside a trench coat with the new pup on his shoulders wearing a fedora. Sure, your spouse might notice that you appear slightly taller and a whole lot cuter, but most times this and "You need a shave" is all that is noted.

This still works today.

Personally, I prefer smuggling the pup in the back of my trousers. If you do this correctly, by rushing past your spouse and saying, "I need the washroom now!" he or she will not question why there is movement and perhaps even barking emanating from the seat of your pants. Needless to say, the pup should be kept on the outside of your underwear. Otherwise, people will think you are weird.

This does not work with anything larger than a golden retriever.

Other ways include placing the pup in a box clearly labelled "Not a hunting dog!" or, if the pup is sleeping and of a long-haired breed, having it pass off as a new toupee.

Once the pup is actually in the house, things get interesting.

First off, unless your spouse is completely addicted to social media, they will probably take notice of the subtle hints, which include chewed up slippers, constant barking, and the sudden purchase of puppy food and dog bowls.

They might even notice the pup as it tugs on their pant legs.

Once this occurs, it is incumbent on you to act surprised and say things like, "Oh my goodness! Where did you come from?"

I should point out that one fatal mistake we often make is to add the name of the pup to that question. This usually exposes the ruse, so try to avoid it.

At this stage, you should let nature take its course and watch your spouse fall in love with the puppy, which again should not be referred to by its name.

If your spouse is hard-hearted and lacking humanity however, he or she will tell you to take it to the dog shelter – which you should pretend to do. Then return an hour later, using the trench coat or back of trouser method and give it a second try. And third, if required.

In the end, all but the coldest-hearted spouses will succumb to the puppy's charms.

Especially, if you agree to do the home renovation.

Ontario Culture Days celebrates arts, culture and community

Ontario Culture Days is coming to Haliburton Highlands from September 18 to October 4, 2026, offering residents and visitors an opportunity to connect, create and celebrate the rich arts, culture and heritage of our communities.

The province-wide festival celebrates creativity through free, participatory events, performances, workshops and studio tours hosted by local artists, cultural organizations and community groups.

This year, Haliburton has been designated a Spotlight Destination for Ontario Culture Days, putting the Haliburton Highlands at the center of a province-wide celebration of arts and culture. The Arts ~Council Haliburton Highlands has taken on the role of provincial hub for Ontario Culture Days and is helping to bring together artists, organizations and communities throughout Haliburton County.

The arts have an important role to play in enriching our lives, the Arts Council says. They provide opportunities to make new connections, engage in meaningful conversations, discover different perspectives and embrace creativity. They can also help us better understand the culture and history of our own area while giving us opportunities to learn about the experiences and traditions of others. We are all healthier and more well-rounded when we embrace some form of the arts – music, theatre, painting, writing, quilting, and more – by being a creator or being part of the audience.

The Arts Council invites everyone to come out and be part of this vibrant celebration to :

Connect with others and different ideas. Engage in conversations. Enjoy and embrace creativity. Discover the culture and history of our area and of others. And, most importantly, be part of a welcoming and vibrant community.

Haliburton Highlands is proud to be a Spotlight Destination, and the community is invited to take part in the many experiences that make our region such a special place to live, work and visit. And if you have an idea for an arts and culture event, contact us at www.Haliburtonarts.on.ca

Come out, get involved and discover what happens when a community comes together through the arts.

Local girls represent Haliburton on the ice

Haliburton Lakers Bring Home Third-Place Finish at Prestigious Queen of the Rings Tournament, on one of Ontario's biggest stages.

Local girls took to the ice in Toronto at the 2026 Queen of the Rings Tournament the first weekend of August, finishing third overall. /submitted

The Haliburton Lakers U15BB all-girls hockey team returned home from Toronto with plenty to celebrate, after an impressive showing at the 2026 Queen of the Rings Tournament, one of the premier female hockey events in North America. Competing against strong teams from across Ontario and beyond, the Lakers captured the consolation championship and finished third overall in their division, capping off a memorable weekend of competition and camaraderie.

Hosted annually in the Greater Toronto Area, the Queen of the Rings tournament is widely regarded as one of the most prestigious events in girls' hockey, drawing top female teams from across the continent for a showcase of talent, sportsmanship, and competition.

Representing Haliburton County in the U15BB division, the Lakers displayed impressive skill, resilience, and teamwork, overcoming challenges and growing stronger with every game. Their hard work paid off with a consolation-round championship and a third-place overall finish, a remarkable achievement for a team proudly carrying the Haliburton name onto a major provincial stage.

Parents, coaches, and supporters noted the way the athletes competed with intensity while also representing their hometown with determination, respect, sportsmanship and pride.

"The results were fantastic, but what stood out most was the way the players supported one another and never quit," said trainer Ginnie Foulds. "They showed tremendous character throughout the weekend and represented Haliburton County in a way our entire community can be proud of."

The success of the Lakers was supported by the dedication of a committed coaching and support staff. Head coach Mike Hamilton, trainer Ginnie Foulds, and assistant coaches Joe Cox and Dan Hanson, played key roles in preparing the team and guiding the athletes through the challenges of tournament competition. Their leadership, encouragement, and commitment helped create an environment where players could shine both on and off the ice.

The team also acknowledged Lisa Irvine for her exceptional work behind the scenes. From planning and logistics to tournament coordination and team management, Irvine's leadership helped ensure the players and coaches could focus on hockey while enjoying a well-organized and positive experience.

"Events like Queen of the Rings require a lot of preparation long before the puck drops," said coach Mike Hamilton. "Lisa's dedication to the team was invaluable and greatly appreciated by players and families alike."

This year's appearance marks the third time a team from the Haliburton area has participated in the prestigious Queen of the Rings tournament, further highlighting the strong interest and talent across the county. Many of the U15 players are already talking about the possibility of returning next year and once again representing Haliburton County with pride.

"This tournament was a great opportunity for this talented group of girls to showcase their skill and demonstrate what they can accomplish when they work together," said team manager, Lisa Irvine. "They're already motivated to come back stronger next season and continue building on this success."

While Irvine had hoped to field both a U13 and U15 teams for the 2026 event, a U13 team was ready to go, but could not secure a goalie. However, the success of the Lakers has strengthened optimism for the future. Irvine says their goal is to return next season with both U13 and U15 teams competing under the Haliburton banner.

With a third-place finish, countless memories, and renewed excitement for the future, the Haliburton Lakers have once again demonstrated what can be achieved through dedication, teamwork, and community support.

EMILY STONEHOUSE
County Life Editor

It's the moment many parents and busy kids have been waiting for.

The gymnastics gym is almost ready.

What started as a dream for Kathy Judson as she chauffeured her two kids to and from the city to participate in sports, has turned into a reality for the community as a whole.

As of Aug. 17, Judson officially launched Haliburton Gymnastics off Industrial Park Road as a soft opening. "The timing isn't exactly what we expected or hoped," explained Judson. "We got access to the facility May 1, but due to unexpected hold ups obtaining our permit to start construction, we weren't able to start anything until closer to July. Luckily we have the best trades on the tasks and everyone has laser focus to get us open on time."

Because it's a soft opening, Judson noted that the site will be functional and safe, but details around signage, paint, and new walls are still in the works. She anticipates the grand opening will kick off their fall programming in September.

But Judson doesn't do anything small. While completing the site itself was a feat, the coach and mother dedicated herself to a plethora of programming to offer the families of Haliburton County, including recreational, precompetitive, and competitive gymnastics, parent and tot and kinder classes, acrobatics and aerial arts, adult gymnastics, an open gym, rock climbing and bouldering, offerings for homeschool groups, birthday parties, and day camps, tumbling from beginner to advances, and trampoline classes.

"To my amazement, we have a lot of talent and experience on our team," said Judson. "Our head coach, John Craig, has more than 30 years coaching high level competitive gymnastics and is Coach Learning Facilitator for Gymnastics Ontario, which means he also offers the courses to train coaches."

Craig will be training a large group of the Haliburton Gymnastics coaches at the end of the month. "We have three competitive level trained coaches including myself, John and another," explained Judson, "then we have two more highly experienced rec coaches: Christina Jones and Amelia Cunningham, whom many of the kids will recognize." All coaches are trained through the National Coach Certification Program (NCCP), and properly vetted by Gymnastics Ontario.

The facility recently added two certified climbing coaches on the roster: Drew Moore and Holly Peterson.

Judson laughed saying that she "broke the internet" when the booking website first went live. "The site literally stopped working for a few hours as it got too many hits at once," she said. With only the basics available for now, August drop-in classes and try-outs are open and available at www.haliburtongymnastics.com. Judson shared that additional classes and registrations will be available shortly, so encourages all those interested to keep an eye on the site.

While the progress is notable, Judson shared that it was not for the faint of heart. "Ever since I began to put this together, I've had to maintain a one-foot-in-front-of-the-other approach," she said, noting that the construction phase has gone on a little longer than she had hoped for. Eventually, Judson hopes to be in a position to apply for grants that exist for not-for-profits, and to either expand the facility, or eventually purchase the building they are using. "But I feel it's important to keep our rhythm and the step by step approach for now," she said.

It's a labour of love, creating a facility for the community as a whole. Judson was quick to point out the many volunteers, contractors, and support networks that have contributed to getting Haliburton Gymnastics off the ground. "Without those key players, this would not have happened," she said. "What an incredible lesson and message I believe we are sending our local youth about coming together to fulfill a community need, and also, that we can overcome what feels like 'the impossible' when we rally for something together."

Listen to Haliburton's history in a record store

We can all see that Haliburton has become a hub of artistic and musical talent.

It's worth questioning how that happened. Who made Haliburton this musical beacon?

The answer might be found in an old record, currently stored at Redmans records. It's entitled, "Haliburton Highlands Secondary School Glee Club April 8, 1967." One copy of this showed up in the record shop several years ago. Since then, more copies have surfaced. There are now four copies at Redmans Records.

If you put the record on, you can hear a full young choir with piano accompaniment perform songs like Somewhere my Love, Climb Every Mountain and Canada which is a musical homage to the '67 Centennial celebrations.

This record, like most of the happenings in our musical community, can be traced to Bill Gliddon, who ran the Glee Club at Haliburton Highlands Secondary in 1967 when after a very successful Kiwanis festival, someone recommended that they send a recording to a national competition.

Les Smith from Toronto had a business taking his portable recording equipment around Ontario from school to school. When Bill asked him to make a recording for the festival, they kept adding more songs until it was a full album. They recorded it in the Girls' Gym on a Saturday. They Started at 10:00 and kept going until 2:30. They were "Happily exhausted," says Bill. "Les said our school was the best he'd ever recorded."

Bill had only been running the Glee Club for one year when these recordings were made. He has always aimed to inspire young musicians. He says, "Before I started the Glee Club there really wasn't any music here."

When he was young, Bill took piano lessons from a man who came to the school from out of town. That teacher only took a few keen students out for a lesson once or twice a month. Bill ended up being mostly self taught up to grade 10 RCM before going to university for music and composition. Only someone with that kind of self motivation would be able to take a group of mostly untrained students in 1966 and within a year have them singing choral four part harmonies for a recording.

Amazingly popular in its beginning, the Glee Club that year had 88 students. Some of whom are still locals and still own their own copy of the record. Many of the last names on the insert are familiar.

Dianne Hagerman was a student at the high school at the time. She says; "We had no music program at the high school in those years and it was a wonderful idea to form a Glee Club and to make a recording for the 100th birthday of Canada. I had always loved singing, in church choirs and festivals, in a folk song extracurricular club at school. Bill was my piano teacher, so I knew he would be fun to sing with. And it was very special to 'cut a record'...we felt so grown up and professional. What a wonderful opportunity he offered us. Ever grateful!"

Kelsey Redman of Redmans Records says that she would likely be able to sell some of the copies if people are interested. Even if you just want to hear the record, you can head over to the shop, and ask her to play it. She'll put it on the turntable, and you can hear a sampling of Haliburton's music history.

Words

I HAVE three kids, all in various stages of their reading journeys.

One is entering teenage-hood. Her preferences in reading span past the early days of dragons and wizards. She's hovering closer to romance, conflict, drama. Her outside worlds suddenly mirroring her book worlds, or vice versa.

The middle one is wise beyond her years. She loves mystery, imagination, whimsy and wonder. Once she's sucked into a book, it's hard to pull her out. I envy her level of nonchalance towards the outside world, when her nose is deep in a world of wonder.

EMILY STONEHOUSE
County Life Editor

The third is just starting on his reading path. Not quite two-and-a-half, we've read to him every night since he was wee. I even have a memory of propping a book on my rounded belly, reading outloud to Red is Best and Goodnight Moon, hoping that he found comfort in my voice, even before his eyes had seen the light.

Since having my son, I have found a new love for books. I grew up as a reader, but during my pregnancy, I suddenly found that I had some time. Or at least, slightly more time than I was used to having.

I was forever a book lover. But not just the stories inside the books, but the books themselves. The dashes of colour on the covers, the crinkle of the pages, the smell that permeates a sense of nostalgia we all somehow carry.

But with kids and early bedtimes, those books became a thing of the past.

Until I committed to a change.

I swore I'd never do it, but I switched out my trusty dusty tomes, and invested in an e-reader.

At first, I kept my reading method as a secret; fearful that I would tarnish my legitimacy as a reader, as a writer.

But then something changed.

Instead of leafing through books through the twilight hours, I found myself reading more; the dim warm light emanating from the e-reader extended my reading times, kept my snoozing wee bundle at ease, and gave me something to do with my mind, my body, my soul, my hands, during those early hazy days of postpartum.

And I kept at it. One book quickly flowing into the next. Again and again, the world at my fingertips.

All this to say, there is no right or wrong way to consume words.

As a writer, I've long been simultaneously mindful and in complete awe of the world of words. 26 little lines, dashes, dots and squiggles, melded and molded into every story we've ever known.

From dragons and romance to Goodnight Moon, words and letters are the foundational building blocks of imagination, of stories, of pasts and presents and futures.

And no matter how you consume those words, the value is in them being shared. Passed down through well-thumbed paperbacks or campfire tales. Listened to in the car during a long roadtrip, or tapped out with a dim light from a tired new mother.

Once a story settles itself into your soul, you'll never be the same again.

And I think that's truly beautiful.

Top 10 signs that you are really lost

A LOT of people – OK, men – have a difficult time accepting that they are lost. Instead, they will make up excuses and say things like "The place must have moved" or "They changed the roads since last time I was here."

The point is, it's just not that easy to determine at what point you are officially lost. So, as a public service, here are the top 10 signs that you are truly lost.

STEVE GALEA
Humour Columnist

1. Road signs are suddenly in a different language.
2. Other cars are suddenly being driven on the wrong side of the road.
3. Huge uptick in local penguin populations.
4. First time you ever encountered ostrich crossing signs.
5. You've driven eight hours and still haven't found the corner store.
6. Google Maps App keeps adding "For the love of God" in front of all turn instructions.
7. You start flipping coins to determine which way you'll turn.
8. Just passed a sign that says, "Next exit, Northwest Passage."
9. Have done so many circles that people think you are on a racetrack.
10. Just drove by the International Space Station for the second time.

Snails

Snails emerging from the drenched earth, and their hiding places among the litter of leaves, curled in their shells, clinging to blades of grass after Rain, colonies of them, crossing the border between grass and concrete, oozing onto the sidewalk, where my feet and eyes pause, to gawk down at their shells, precious as gems, that I am tempted to pluck up from the ground, and hold and admire in the palm of my hand, but I leave them be,
knowing that the snails are still inside their brittle shells, carrying their Home with them wherever they go, embarking on their journey across the desert of concrete, an oasis of tall grasses and weeds waiting for them on the other side, my eyes transfixed by the tiny antennae peeping out of the shells, wondering whether the snails feel the freshness of Air after Rain, the way I feel breeze graze the flesh of my cheeks and arms and feet, as I crouch down on the slab of concrete to watch a lone snail missing its shell, ooze its way across the sidewalk,
no place to hide from the behemoth of a boulder hovering over it, I wonder whether it senses my presence,
exposed to the elements and my prying eyes,
fascinated by the homeless snail's plight, wondering whether it abandoned its shell on purpose, to explore the world beyond it, leaving the only Home it's ever known, now slinking alone, across strange terrain, towards the forest of grass and weeds springing from the strip of No Man's land between the sidewalk and street, where raindrops dripping from blades of grass will moisten its flesh as it searches for a place to rest, the other snails, all still carrying their shells, knowing where they will spend the Night, beneath the brown-spiraled roofs that have sheltered them from birth, the earth waiting to receive them
when the droplets of Rain have dried, and they grow brittle in their shells, seeking their secret hiding places again,
I worry for the lone snail missing its shell, oozing its way, naked, across the concrete, nothing to shelter it but Sky, swirls of ink clouds lingering after Rain, how long and slow its journey will be, like the lives of humans if they're lucky, roofs to shelter them or the arms of others, but the shells of their flesh exposing them every day to the elements and strangers' eyes, nowhere to hide but meet each other's gaze, before glancing away, feeling naked, some days,
as if the feelings churning inside are visible to those that carry their own burdens beneath the shell of their flesh,
I rise from the ground, feeling like a giant hovering over these snails, emerging from the earth after Rain, to explore their sliver of world before they curl back into the cocoon of their shell, the darkness of the earth shrouding them, my eyes peering down at the lone snail missing its shell, oozing across the sidewalk, hoping it reaches the other side Alive,
where tall grasses and weeds wait to shelter it, my eyes glancing up at Sky, changing every day, feeling small as the snails oozing across the slab of concrete holding my feet, slowing my pace and Breath as I walk, inhaling the beauty of this brittle world, rinsed by Rain, fragile as an abandoned shell, waiting for its inhabitant to return.

North of Miners' Bay – Power House – Minden

In 1929, the Old Mills at Minden were demolished to make way for a modern dam and powerhouse to create electricity. The Orillia Water Light and Power Commission began the project and erected a dam and power plant that was officially opened on October 25, 1935.

By that December, homes in Minden had electricity, and the gas lanterns that had illuminated the village streets since 1910, were retired. Reflecting the times, the Power Plant had an Art Deco style.

A local poet reflected on the change. The first verse of his The March Of Progress reads:

From the flow which turned the mill stone,
Where oft' the slow ox team;
Soon through mans's inventive genius,
Far off city light shall gleam.

The first post card dates to the late 1930s. The second to a decade later, and was produced by (PECO), the Photogelatine Engraving Company Limited of Toronto.

Miners' Bay was not served by commercial electricity until after WW II.

Cottage country is calling

GAIL STELTER
County Life Contributor

Cottage country is calling. You hear it but you don't answer.

Cottage country is calling. You want to answer but the timing is not quite right.

Cottage country is calling. Hurray, you finally answered and now you are here as a visitor, or a renter, or perhaps you are staying at a lakeside resort.

Cottage country is calling and you think, no need to call me anymore, I live in cottage country. I live where clear lakes sparkle in the setting sun and tall trees reach the sky; where the air is fresh and small lakeside towns and villages dot the landscape.

According to Wikipedia, based on Statistics Canada 2021, Haliburton County has about 20, 571 permanent year-round residents. The population surges to roughly 60,000 during summer peak weeks as seasonal cottage owners and visitors arrive. We have ~21,072 private dwellings, and more than half are seasonal or secondary properties. And there are always new people just like us who continue to answer the call of cottage country

My first trip to Haliburton happened when my parents answered the call in 1960. Dad was always the driver, and mom always encouraged him to slow down. He might have told her, as he often did, that he was flying low. I was in the back seat with two lawn chairs and my dog, Hydro. We were on a holiday, not quite a whole family holiday, as my seventeen-year-old brother is at home. He has a summer job, and I know he is happy to be home and will have his friends at our house playing guitars and cards. I know this because most Saturdays, when mom is working at Simpsons and dad is at the Humber House, he and his friends hang out in our basement.

The cottage rental is on Minden Lake. Our road trip includes singing our car trip favourites. Flying low works for me, and soon, we arrive at the never-ending road into the lake. I am grabbed by the narrow one-car tree-lined road, the ups and downs, the twists and turns, and the hydro crews putting up poles. I especially like that. No electricity will be awesome! The lake comes into view. My mother probably said, "Look, Gates." I know this because she always says this. I was fourteen, and I remember her telling me, "Look, Gates" at some cows by the roadside.

I met a friend, Maxine and her brother whose name I cannot remember. That week I taught myself to swim and I went for my first boat ride. When we weren't swimming out to the floating dock, Maxine, her brother and I explored and walked through the forest to Horseshoe Lake. Maxine taught me a chalkboard game called SOS.

The little cottage included mice running along the rafters. I had never seen a mouse and I thought I should be afraid, but my dad laughed and he promised me I would be fine. I believed him.

I roamed around the little town of Minden looking in all the stores and I was so pleased with the little single-flower vase I bought for my mom. I did this while my parents went grocery shopping, to the beer store or the Legion. In these post-war years, the Legion was still the meeting place for World War II vets.

One night, a policeman drove up to our cottage. I didn't know the police would come here. Was this for an unpaid speeding ticket? Was something wrong with my brother? The police officer told my dad that my brother was trying to reach him. No phones at the cottage. After driving to town, we learned that dad had received notification of a new job posting and my brother wanted to make sure he didn't miss the application deadline. Relief.

There were a two more summers of cottage rentals at Davis Lake and Lake Chemong. There was the summer as a camp counselor near Penetang on Georgian Bay. I fell in love with cottage country, and it was no surprise when we finally heard and answered the call in 1995, and became cottage owners on Drag Lake and then full-time residents.

Answering the call on the senior side continues even as our aging bodies take twists and turns. We have moved to a home that does not have all the steps down to the lake. Nevertheless, we continue to live our cottage country life with our pontoon boat and long swims on almost every hot day. This week we have stepped back into the role of cottage renters, and as I sit writing this, I am looking out over Kash. All our children and grandchildren will be here – coming and going as the older grandkids kids now are working during the summer. Having our family come together at this point in all our lives can be a challenge but the draw of cottage summertime and memories of past summers is entrenched in the hearts of our children and grandchildren. I didn't think we'd be renters again, but I'm sure glad we are. Life is sometimes cyclical and that is okay. I am grateful we answered this call and all the calls that came before.

Clowning around with Minden Rotary

For the first time ever, Minden Rotary expanded their traditional offerings by holding a two-day RotaryFest in downtown Minden, with games, activities, face painting, vendors, a community yard sale, and live music in August. The Celebrity Clowns took to the streets to raise money for community project, supported and organized through Minden Rotary. While the rain held off and hundreds flocked to downtown Minden, the event was one of the top community events of the summer, and was fun for all ages. /TIM YANO staff photographer

The hot summer heats up local economy

by MARIA CALABRESE
Staff Reporter

The warm and dry summer might have temporarily withered some of the forests and gardens, but tourism in July and August thrived under the hot sun thanks to a steady shower of visitors who helped local business flourish.

A snapshot of trends that emerged over the summer indicates more events and improved promotion attracted more people to the Highlands this summer. This, coupled with increased consumer confidence, gave most businesses a much-needed fiscal shot in the arm.

Luckily, the usual May 24 weekend touchstone, when locals gear up for the summer season, wasn't an augury of things to come since winter was so slow to release its grasp on the county.

"When you look at the overall tourism trend, bookings in many cases came quite late because I think folks waited to see what the summer was going to be like," said Brian Dean of the Haliburton Highlands Chamber of Commerce. "The first week of July seemed to be relatively slow as far as traffic flow here on Highway 35, but took off after about the first seven to ten days. And it hasn't stopped yet."

Although shopping trends hardly came close to the spending sprees of the late-1980s, consumers were buying big-ticket items again and local marinas, for example, which predominantly service cottagers

School projects get EIC stamp of approval

by PETER DOWNS
Staff Reporter

Haliburton's school board is one important step closer to turning blueprints for a new primary school and an expanded high school into reality.

The province's powerful Education Improvement Commission (EIC) has endorsed the board's $2.3-million plan to replace aging Victoria Street School with a new school in Haliburton.

The EIC, co-chaired by Kennisis Lake cottager Ann Vanstone, has also approved a modified renovation plan to upgrade and expand the high school.

Under a $6-million proposal, the board wanted to add a triple gym, theatre/lecture hall, five science labs, an expanded cafeteria and other improvements.

However, the EIC has told the board to trim one gymnasium and the $400,000 theatre from the high school addition.

Despite the changes, board officials are thrilled the two construction projects look as though they will finally get off the drawing board after years of planning and nearly the past 18 months on hold.

"It's not very often you get that kind of good news item so it boosts the spirits, that's for sure," said board chair Cheryl Murdoch.

The EIC's go ahead means the board is two-thirds of the way through the approvals process before it can begin construction on either of the projects.

Earlier in the summer the local committee overseeing the transition to one merged school board for Haliburton County, Victoria County and Muskoka endorsed the building plans.

Now the board needs to get approval from the Ministry of Education, which has said it will pay $425,000 toward replacing VSS and $1.4-million toward upgrading the high school.

However, a green light on construction by the Ministry is virtually assured now that the projects have received EIC approval, said Murdoch. "We're told that it will just be a rubber stamp."

If the projects are approved quickly by the Ministry, it's possible the board may be able to begin some preliminary construction before winter, said Murdoch.

"We really desperately want to get these projects started by December before the new board

SENIOR POWER

Strategic planning committee reminded of retirees' impact on the economy

by PETER DOWNS
Staff Reporter

As Haliburton County charts its future by creating a Strategic Plan, it needs to keep in mind the important role seniors can play in the area's growth.

That was the advice a group of participants offered last week at the second round of public consultation meetings in the development of the plan.

"This county needs a stable financial base, which seniors can provide," said No Wiebe, noting that seniors and retirees moving to the community have guaranteed incomes from government and private pensions. "... We could have a very solid economic base, if we turn this into a retirement community."

John Smith, a former Aurora resident who retired to the county last year with his wife, agreed.

"The group of people from 55 to 65 have a greater amount of disposable income ...They could have a tremendous economic impact on the area, if the area is willing to try to attract them."

During two sessions Thursday at Stanhope Firefighters' Hall, participants broke into several small groups to discuss how a variety of subject areas could contribute to the county's future.
